It is stated that the President will pass the Fourth of July quietly. This will be news to those people who expected that he would become excited, and make the welkin ring over Buzzard's Bay ring with whooplas and other expletives.

A soldier stationed in the arsenal at Augusta, Ga., became infatuated with the daughter of a gardener, and became so demonstrative that he came near choking the girl to death, and winding up the business by burning up the old man's house, which he would have done if the o. m. hadn't interfered with his operations by pumping two loads of buckshot into him.

Bismarck says he would travel more than he does if the people would let him slosh around like a private individual and not make so much fuss over him, and so would the King of Denmark, who is a very democratic sort of a fellow. He would travel more if the people didn't insist on showing their admiration by many demonstrations and playing fool, very much to his annoyance.

Under the new constitution of Kentucky women may serve on juries, and one of the Judges in Louisville is going to try the experiment in a case where an old rooster is suing a young woman for breach of promise. Public opinion is somewhat divided as to whether the jury of women will send the man to the penitentiary or present the young woman with a chromo for playing him and then kicking him.

That was an accommodating sort of an arrangement made by the Ken-Democratic Convention when it adopted a "sound money" platform and nominated a free silver man for Governor. The Democrat who doesn't like the platform can vote for the candidate and the man who doesn't like the candidate can vote for the platform. Nothing like genius in doing up jobs of that kind.

The plague which carried off so many people in Hong Kong, China, last year, has made its appearance again in Choo Foo. It is said to be particularly fatal to rats as well as to human beings. Possibly this, like some other diseases, originates among the rats and is transmitted to the rat-eaters.

Items of Interest Gathered Here and There and Briefly Noted.

— This is the last day for listing taxes.

— Local forecast for to-day: Showers; light westerly to northerly winds.

— The Deutsche Frauen Verien had a pleasant day for their trip to Carolina Beach.

— The Fourth of July falls on Thursday of next week. What are you going to do about it?

— There was 7.2 feet water in the river at Fayetteville Thursday; a rise of 2.7 feet in the previous 24 hours.

— There was a small fire on the roof of a house on the corner of Fourth and Taylor streets yesterday afternoon. It was soon extinguished and the damage was trifling.

— The regular service at the Seamens' Bethel to-morrow afternoon at 3 o'clock will be conducted by Rev. A. D. McClure. Seamen and river men are specially invited to attend. All are welcome.

The Fourth at Lake Waccamaw.

A correspondent of the STAR writing from Lake Waccamaw says: "A big time is anticipated at this place on the Fourth of July. There will be base ball, music, dancing, sailing, bathing, fishing, etc. Whiteville's first nine will play ball with the Welcher Creek Club, the "White Caps." A brass band from Wilmington is expected. There will be fire works at night. Altogether, it is expected that the attractions offered will draw the largest crowd ever seen at the Lake."

Fourth of July Excursions on the S. A. L.

On account of the Fourth of July the Seaboard Air Line will sell round trip tickets to points on its lines at two cents per mile each way for the round trip. Round trip rates from Wilmington to Charlotte, $7.50; Durham, $6.85; Henderson, $6.35; Maxton, $3.50; Raleigh, $5.30; Portsmouth or Norfolk, $9.70; Suffolk, $9.00.

One Cent a Word.

Hereafter advertisements to go in our "Business Locals" department will be charged one cent per word for each insertion; but no advertisement, however short, will be taken for less than 20 cents.

This is a reduction from former rates and it is also a convenience to advertisers, who can calculate the exact cost of their advertisements, which must be paid for always in advance.

Cotton Bloom From Richmond County.

Murdock Malloy, an enterprising and prosperous colored farmer near Laurel Hill, Richmond county, sent a cotton bloom yesterday to Messrs. McNair & Pearsall. It was plucked on the 27th. Malloy last year sent the first bloom received in Wilmington, about two weeks earlier than the bloom he sent this season.

WILMINGTON WINS.

The Game Played Yesterday With High Point at Hilton Park—A Score of 13 to 6.

The Wilmington base ball team played the third game with the High Pointers yesterday afternoon at Hilton Park. A very large crowd of spectators was present and saw the Wilmington boys play ball in great style, redeeming themselves by a score of thirteen to six.

The game was called by the umpire, Mr. Chas. F. Jones, at 3:30 o'clock, with A. Prempert, of Wilmington, and Davis of High Point, as official scorers. The High Pointers took the outs and Wilmington went to the bat, Zellars making a hit on the first ball tossed over the plate. Wilson, pitch, and Oldham, catch, were in good trim, and up to the fourth inning High Point hadn't scored a single run, while Wilmington "got in the game proper" in the third, scoring three runs. This encouraged the boys, and afterwards they batted the balls all over the diamond. In the 6th inning High Point got rattled and had to change pitchers. Hauser and King were the High Point battery. Ragsdale went in the box and the Wilmington boys served him the same way. So Jones was put in and pitched the 8th and 9th innings.

Wilmington's team without a single exception played number one ball. Zellars, Watson, Furlong, Oldham and Wilson all showed up well at the bat, making several safe and long hits. Rankin and Beery caught every fly that was sent to left and centre. Johnson and Belden held up their end of the game and proved themselves excellent players. Oldham and Wilson, as a battery, are what has been needed for several seasons, and from now on the public can expect number one ball. For two innings the boys played in a hard rain and were drenched, but umpire Jones held them to it and gave perfect satisfaction to both teams. The game was exciting, and the grand stand was kept in a continued uproar.

"Trilby's Band," of the drum corps, were on hand, and made the "welkin ring" after every good play. "Little Billie," Wilmington's mascott, was too proud for anything.

Below we furnish the tabulated report of the game:

In the report of Thursday's game it was stated that Rankin dropped thrown balls. It should have read Belden, as Rankin played an errorless game.

Manager W. W. Roberts received the following letter yesterday from the High Point base ball team, signed by all of the management and players, who express themselves as highly pleased with their visit:

We, the High Point Base Ball Club, wish to return our thanks to the Wilmington Base Ball Club, and especially to Mr. Roberts, for the courteous treatment which has been shown us. We have found the Wilmington Base Ball Club to be composed of gentlemen. There is some fine material in the club, and with proper training and encouragement they will be an honor to the city. The club has nothing to fear in the State. The treatment and fare at the Purcell house has been all that could be asked for. We only hope it may sometimes again be our pleasure to meet the Wilmington Base Ball Club and to stop at the Purcell house.

The above was written before the last game, and last evening when the train left, the Wilmington team went to the depot, gave three cheers for the High Point boys, and had Trilby's "band" of the Drum Corps to furnish music.

COUNTY COMMISSIONERS.

Called Meeting—Applications for License to Sell Liquors Granted—Other Matters Considered and Acted Upon.

The Board of Commissioners of New Hanover county met yesterday in special session to act upon applications to sell liquors.

A number of applications were received and acted upon favorably.

On motion the action of the Board in levying a tax of two per cent. on dealers in drugs and seeds for country purposes was rescinded. The Board then decided not to levy such tax on dealers in drugs and seeds, under Section 23 of the Revenue Act, provided, however that all dealers in drugs and seeds shall pay their tax under Section 21, as other merchants.

On motion of Commissioner Stevenson, the following was adopted,

"Resolved, From and after the 1st day of July, 1895, the chairman of this Board shall receive fifty dollars per month for extra services on the different committees, and that each member shall receive $3 per day and mileage for each day's service on any committee, subject to the approval of the finance committee.

On motion, Simon Garner was allowed to peddle without license during the month of July.

The Board at 5 p. m. adjourned until 9.30 p. m. next Monday, which is the regular meeting day.

The Commissioners resolved themselves into the Board of Education, and upon motion of Commissioner Stevenson, adopted the following:

Resolved, That on and after July 1, the chairman of the Board of Education be paid twenty-five dollars per month for his services.

The Board then adjourned.

NEWS FROM RALEIGH.

GOVERNOR CARR AND DAUGHTERS AT MOREHEAD CITY.

The S. A. L. and the Southern Railroad—Concert For Benefit of the King's Daughters—Criminal Court—A Child of Dr. McGee Seriously Hurt—Collector Simmons—Professor Withers Appointed Crop Statistician—The Arrington Court.

[Star Correspondence.]

RALEIGH, N. C., June 28.

Governor Carr, accompanied by his two small daughters, went down to Morehead to-day to spend a few days.

A Seaboard official who was loud in his abuse of newspapers for taking a stand against the importation of Western employes, now admits that but for the firm stand taken by the papers who made the warfare there would have been no end to the discharges. Most all of the discharged employes have been reinstated. The handsome new building of the Seaboard in Portsmouth is completed, and it is said the officers residing in Atlanta will move into the building about the 15th of July.

Several of the dozen engines which were ordered by Mr. St. John when he first took charge of the road have arrived and are in use.

The Seaboard people claim that the Southern is making a big bluff about establishing their deep water terminus in Norfolk. A Seaboard bond holder returned from Baltimore yesterday, and he says he is sure that they have no intention of doing what they say. The Seaboard people here claim that the completion of the Albemarle and Raleigh Road from Springhope here would be injurious to the town. They state that it would cut off the Southern and Eastern part of the county, which makes Raleigh a market. This is all buncombe, the people want the Southern to come here.

A concert will be given here on July 3rd for the benefit of the King's Daughters. It will be under the direction of Mr. and Mrs. T. J. Simmons (nee Leslie Southgate, of Durham), of Eufala, Alabama.

It is said that Maj. Stahlman will be fought to the bitter end by E. St. John at the Asheville meeting, when the new Railroad Association is to be formed.

There are seventy-four cases docketed for the term of the Criminal Court, which convenes in Raleigh Monday week.

The agitation about the dead horse which lay in the watershed for about three weeks, has about blown over.

The little seventeen-months old child of Dr. J. W. McGee, Jr., fell from a banister to the ground, a distance of eight feet, breaking her jawbone and knocking in several teeth. Had it not been for Dr. McGee seizing the child's clothing, thereby checking the fall, death must have necessarily occurred.

Mr. K. W. Weathers, an old Raleigh boy, who now resides in Norfolk, was married yesterday to Miss Kitty Rhodes, of Shelby.

Internal Revenue Collector Hon. F. M. Simmons has gone to Washington on official business.

Prof. W. A. Withers, of the Agricultural and Mechanical College, has been appointed Crop Statistician for North and South Carolina, with a salary of $900. Prof. Withers received a telegram announcing him of the fact; the office came entirely without his knowledge. He succeeds Col. John C. Tipton. Prof. Withers will continue at the A. & M. College as Professor, as the office does not interfere with his regular work.

The Commercial and Farmers' Bank, of this city, cashed Chief Justice Campbell's warrant issued by the Auditor for $99.40. This morning they formally presented it to the Treasurer for payment and he kindly refused. Auditor Furman is of the opinion that Mr. Worth will be compelled to pay it.

It is said that the resolution in favor of Mrs. Arrington and which established the most august Court did not pass the House. Mrs. Arrington states that she was present and that the bill passed unanimously.

There is an order issued by the postoffice authorities at Washington which requires letter carriers to take mail out of the box at the depot on their regular rounds. The box at the depot is an extra large one and there is one man employed to attend to it. Persons place mail in it mostly after the mail at the postoffice has been closed. For the past few days the train to Wilmington has been late and the carriers have taken out numbers of important letters which were intended to go off on the delayed trains. Postmaster Busbee has written to Washington to have the order rescinded.

Secretary of State Coke says the public printers are required by a section in the Code to deliver the printing to him, paying all freight. The general laws say that he shall furnish them with paper. He construes this as meaning that he shall pay the freight on paper. This has been the arrangement so far and will continue.

[Special Star Telegram.]

Ex-Gov. Jones, of Alabama, was in the city to-day, and left for Haw River to visit Governor Holt. The Metropolitan Advertising Co. was incorporated here to-dry, with capital stock of one million dollars, divided into one hundred thousand shares at the value of ten dollars per share. The incorporators are three Philadelphians. The offices are to be located at Raleigh and several Northern cities.

For the Atlanta Exposition.

A meeting was held yesterday at the office of Captain T. D. Meares of representatives of the "Wilmington Battalion" to discuss arrangements for a proposed visit to the Cotton States Exposition in Atlanta, Ga. There were present at the meeting, Colonel Walker Taylor and Captain W. H. Northrop, representing the Second regiment; Lieutenant-Commander George L. Morton and Lieutenant J. C. Morrison, representing the Naval Reserves; Sir Knight Colonel W. J. Woodward, Sir Knight Captain Thomas D. Meares, Sir Knight Quartermaster Martin Newman, representing Zeb Vance Division U. R. K. of P. It was decided that the committee of arrangements will leave Wilmington for Atlanta, Monday, July 8th, at 3.20 p. m., returning Wednesday afternoon at 12.30 o'clock.

The committee will go as guests of the S. A. L., and will be accompanied by Mr. T. J. Anderson, general passenger agent of the system.

THE COTTON MARKET.

Hubbard's Report of the Condition of the Crop and the Trend of Prices.

NEW YORK, June 27.—The feature of the past week has been the sharp decline in the cotton market to prices practically those ruling in February last, a decline which had not been anticipated by conservative observers of the course and prospects of prices. This has been due to the liquidation of holders who have been wearied out by the depression in Liverpool and Manchester, and by the anticipation that the clearing weather in the South, particularly in Texas, might enable the plant to recuperate and so in a great measure, undo the damage which has, it is admitted, resulted from the excessive rains. The Government report is very meagre and unsatisfactory as to the condition of affairs in Texas; while referring to the excessive moisture in very general terms, it gives no adequate statements from which conclusions may be intelligently drawn, and the trade has been, therefore, compelled to rely on private sources of information. Colored very naturally by the immediate surroundings of the observers, these reports have been of the most varied nature, having in common, however, the statement that much damage has resulted to the growing plant Optimists have in some instances convinced buyers at higher prices that the hardy nature of the plant would make itself felt when the weather becomes more favorable for its development, and these discouraged holders have thrown their purchases upon an unwilling market with the result of a decline in August to 6.65 on the 25th inst. Accelerated as a decline always is by stop orders, these forced sales seem to have unduly depressed prices, and stronger buyers came to the rescue than have been in evidence for some time. It is felt that the improving weather may find the cotton plant so affected that it cannot cope successfully with the conditions which normally are beneficial to it; that trade from being sentimentally better is now actually on the high road to a general revival and prosperity, and that present prices, although over one cent per pound above the lowest on the extreme depression, only discount the smaller crop, which the decreased acreage, due to the enforced economy of planters, must produce. Sales of spot cotton to spinners during the week, specially the latter part, have been large; those have brought fresh orders to the contract market have given the shorts who had become over-confident and over-sold, a busy time in covering their sales; and have in a degree reassured the few holders who have kept their courage under trying circumstances. It must be said that there is a lull in speculation. The activity has been confined mainly to local operators, but the steadiness, if maintained, as seems probable if external influences are at all encouraging, will bring the trade in general to a more roseate view of the future and lead to an investing demand which will be at a continually higher level if precedents are at all valuable as guides. Sentiment is all powerful in business as in politics, and better trade will bring a demand for staples which must enhance their values with rapidity, despite the possibility of a larger supply than anticipated at present.

In the dry goods market a considerable improvement is reported with holders indifferent to sales at existing prices. This is a healthful attitude for the future. There must, of course, be a revival of speculation before there appears much inducement for investors, but inasmuch as the earlier advance in cotton was premature and was, therefore, short-lived, any improvement now based on good trade conditions would be of greater permanence. We hardly think it unreasonable to expect as well as to hope that such may ensue.

CAROLINA MUTUAL

Fire Insurance Company,

of Charlotte, N. C.

The CAROLINA MUTUAL is a strong NORTH CAROLINA Company. It is, however, a stock company, and issues absolutely non-participating and non-assessable policies. Its mutual feature consists in a charter provision, that one-third of its directors must be POLICY-HOLDERS who are NOT stockholders elected by the POLICY-HOLDERS; this is a very strong point, the policy-holders who have great interests at stake, have a share in the management of the Company, and will always know its condition. Better than this, the CAROLINA MUTUAL deposits all premiums received at this agency to their credit with the WILMINGTON SAVINGS AND TRUST COMPANY. This makes it practically a local company. The directors of the company are:

P. M. BROWN,
Of Brown, Weddington & Co., Wholesale Hardware.
E. B. SPRINGS,
Of E. B. Springs & Co., Fertilizers and Wagons.
M. P. PEGRAM,
Cash'r First Nat'l Bank of Charlotte.
B. D. HEATH,
Of Heath Brothers, Bankers.
SAM'L E. WHITE,
President Fort Mill Man'f'g Co.
A. C. SUMMERVILLE,
Lumber and Real Estate.
J. T. ANTHONY,
Wholesale Provisions and Grain.
JOHN W. MILLER,
Real Estate and Cotton Broker.
HERIOT CLARKSON,
Of Clarkson & Duls, Att'ys-at-Law.

These gentlemen stand among the wealthiest and most successful business men of North Carolina, and their names are a guarantee of the Company's honesty, conservatism and success. We heartily recommend the Company to the property owners of Wilmington. We also represent other good companies, and do a general insurance business. Come to see us.

SATURDAY MORNING, JUNE 29, 1895

A LITTLE GAME OF BLUFF.

The New York Chamber of Commerce recently refused to extend material aid to the Cotton States Exposition to be held at Atlanta next Fall, and the reason assigned is that there is too much activity shown in the South in the agitation of the silver question. We do not know what the Chamber of Commerce said, or what reason it gave for its refusal, but we take it that this was the reason from the following extract which we clip from an editorial in the Philadelphia Record:

"Of course, it is to be regretted that the Exposition at the Georgia capital has failed to enlist the generous interest of every class of men throughout the country; but in this particular instance the action of the New York Chamber of Commerce, while in a way lamentable, is neither unreasonable nor surprising. It is merely an illustration of the prudent protection which capital, seeking investment, naturally and inevitably secures. For the Southern people it has a deeper and more significant meaning. It means that the silver heresy is at length inflicting its blighting influence upon the very people who have taken it to their bosoms and nursed it with the tenderest care, and who have been its most earnest and consistent advocates. Such a reaction is inevitable; the boomerang always returns to its starting point.

In this experiment may be found a severe lesson for the cotton states. They can no longer seek to evade or conceal its meaning. The situation is simply this: So long as irrational schemes of finance shall prevail in that section of the country the monied interests of the North, of the Northwest, or, indeed of any part of the Union, will not seek free and unrestrained investment in the Southern States. There is no use for the Southern people to delude themselves on this question. They are confronted with a stern fact which neither the rhetorical flourishes of impassioned speakers nor the fatal financial isms of the Populistic stripe can keep in the background.

While deprecating the apparent 'necessity" for this action on the part of the New York Chamber of Commerce, the Record substantially, if not in so many words, commends it. We have a very high respect for the Record, which we regard as one of the ablest and truest Democratic papers in the North, and the fact that it even indirectly commends such a narrow, proscriptive proceeding, shows the powerful grip the money power up there has on corporate bodies and on the power that is greater than they, the public press.

Such impertinent action ought to be resented by every Southern man, whether he be an advocate of free silver or not, for it amounts to insolent dictation, and is an arrogant assumption of these men who owe whatever of wealth they may have accumulated to the profits they have made out of the products of the industry and labor of others, the Western farmer and the Southern planter, who they assume haven't intelligence enough to know what is best for them, nor the right to contend for what they believe to be the best.

We are sick of the imperious assumption of these self constituted would-be dictators, who ever since the war have been drawing the lines and insisting that the South should follow them, and the South has been doing it. New York has been assuming the right to dictate Democratic national platforms, and the South was expected to stand on them when they were drafted, and did, and we never went into a Democratic convention that New York didn't have a candidate for us whom we were expected to support and did, and yet New York is not a Democratic State, and without New York City would be hopelessly Republican. We suppose that it a poll was made of that Chamber of Commerce a majority of them would be found to be Republicans, who thus give the South to understand that if she doesn't play mum on the financial question she needn't expect any favors or recognition from them.

We were told during the early days of the agitation of tariff retorm that we musn't be too free spoken about that for it might endanger Democratic success in the North and make it hard for some gentleman from New York to be elected President, and therefore we were very conservative on the tariff question. It took a long time to educate these advisers of the South up to the standard of Southern conservatism on the tariff question.

During the last tariff discussion Southern Representatives were reminded time and again that they must sing low on the income tax as it would lose New York and New Jersey and Connecticut—two dependencies of New York—to the Democratic party. And thus it has been on everything. The South has been expected to obey the dictates of New York and play second fiddle to the fellows who have been sawing the catgut up there. The only real use they have for the South is because she has been casting a Democratic vote and helping them to win victories, which they do not know how to use after they have been won.

If the New York Chamber of Commerce can dictate to the South on the silver question couldn't it dictate to us on the national bank question, if that become a subject of public discussion, or on State banks, if they become a subject of public discussion, or on anything else in which the people of the country might be interested? In that case we suppose we would be expected to conform our views and shape our utterances to please the magnates who run the New York Chamber of Commerce, or play mum if they ordered us to, at the risk of incurring their displeasure and forfeiting their "material aid" in any shows that we might get up. Its action in this case shows that some bodies which are large, at least in their own estimation, can, when actuated by selfish motives, do some very small things.

MINOR MENTION.

According to the Press dispatches the majority of the German States are in favor of a monetary congress, and the impression seems to be that the German Government will call it. But exactly what is in view is not clear, whether it is intended to take steps for the restoration of bimetallism or only to discuss and come to some conclusion as to a ratio between gold and silver. It probably means, however, the restoration of silver as money for which those who have been most active in working for the monetary congress contend. The main stumbling block both in the way of such congress and of reaching an agreement in the event it be held will be England, where although the bimetallic sentiment is growing the gold adherents are still in the ascendancy, and stubbornly resist any concessions or any change. Several members of the new ministry, including the Premier, Lord Salisbury, favor bimetallism, but are not sufficiently enthusiastic over it to strike out and endeavor to make that the policy of the Government in advance of any declaration to that effect by the party which they represent. There is only one way that we see to bring England to terms and that is for other nations to ignore her, settle the matter for themselves and let her come in or stay out, as she may elect. It wouldn't be long, in this event, before she would tumble in.

Some of the organs which do not believe in the agitation of the money question call attention to the improved condition of Southern farmers, and inferentially assert that because their condition is somewhat better than it formerly was they should, therefore, be content with the present monetary system and say nothing about it, just play mum and go on with their plowing, planting and harvesting, and feel jolly because their chins are not quite as far under water as they were a couple years ago. If the improvement (and there doubtless has been improvement) was the result of the monetary system there might be some point and some consistency in this kind of talk, but the improvement is not the result of that, but in spite of it, for it is due to the better methods adopted on many farms, the abandonment of the one crop folly, diversified farming, and the raising of home supplies which the majority have been in the habit of buying from other States and paying for out of low-priced cotton. We will wager 16 to 1, that when the bettered condition is found, it is the man who has got out of the one crop rut, and raised his home supplies if nothing more, that has made it.

In some respects the late Democratic convention at Louisville, Ky., was a unique affair, and it isn't easy for an outsider to tell which faction, the free silver, or the anti-free silver was really on top. As far as the platform is any indication the anti-free silver fellows were by a very considerable majority, but as far as the ticket nominated is any indication the free silver men were in a very considerable majority, as, with two exceptions, they with their little slate swept the deck. We suppose the most reasonable accounting for this mix would be that it was a buy and sell business in which the free silver traders agreed to vote for the "sound money" platform to secure votes for their candidates, and the "sound money" traders agreed to vote for the free silver candidates to secure votes for their platform. This isn't a very complimentary solution, but it is about the only one in sight at this distance, and then it must be remembered that the trader is always on hand in conventions when the lines are pretty evenly drawn. The Kentucky Democrat may be a peculiarly constituted individual, and he must be, if he can get up much enthusiasm or do much shouting over that grotesque mixture.

CURRENT COMMENT.

—Mr. J. Pierrepont Morgan has just sailed for Europe. We may expect another bond issue as soon as he returns. It is only with such a possibility in view that he could be persuaded to leave the United States Treasury long enough to let someone else get a hack at it.—Boston Standard, Ind.

—Nothing could be more illogical than the claim of the gold papers that there is plenty of money because the Eastern banks are full of it, and it can be had on call at one or two per cent. Money on call may be of service to Wall street speculators, but it is absolutely worthless to business. Money on call means collateral in the hands of the lender ample to cover the loan, and collateral of a character that he can immediately turn into cash.—Augusta Chronicle, Dem.

—Are the United States of America free and independent? Did the assertion in 1787, "We, the people of the United States, in order to form a more perfect Union, establish justice, insure domestic tranquility, provide for the common defence, promote the general wellfare, and secure the blessings of liberty to ourselves and our posterity, do ordain and establish this Constitution of the United States of America," mean that we must take our standard of money from England?—New York *Mercury. SPIRITS TURPENTINE.

— Elizabeth City Carolinian: The crop reports are more encouraging.

— Newbern Journal: Franklin Allen, colored, aged 14, was drowned yesterday in Trent river near the New bridge.

— Wilson Advance: Very encouraging reports are coming in on every hand. Farmers all report the crops looking better. The improvement for the past week is very marked indeed.

— Raleigh News and Observer: The Van Lindley orchard, at Southern Pines, comprises 350 acres. One hundred acres more will be cleared and planted this winter. The company owns 1,100 acres of land all in one body, which they propose to make one grand peach orchard.

— Scotland Neck Democrat: Mr. John Watson died at the home of his son-in-law, Mr. G. B. Bryant, near Tarboro, last Saturday evening about 7 o'clock, aged 66 years. —— The good seasons and the hot weather for the past few days have caused the crops to greatly improve. While the crops are fifteen or twenty days late, with continued good seasons and favorable weather there will be a great catching up in a few weeks.

— Kinston Free Press: Mrs. Eliza Hill, of this county, died on the morning of June 20th, aged 82 years. —— Mrs. Scott McArthur, living just beyond the Briary, was bitten Thursday, two weeks ago, on the finger by a white oak snahe, while she was in the barn. Mr. McArthur corded the finger above the wound and brought her to Kinston for treatment by Dr. Hyatt. She is getting on all right now. The white oak is the most poisonous snake in this section.

—Fayetteville Observer: A reliable gentleman of 71st told us yesterday of a marvellous but no doubt true incident. He said that while fishing the other day he saw a black snake about four feet long poke its head into the hollow of a tree, then pull it out, turn deliberately around, back its tail into the hole, and after a little skirmishing, bring out three young rabbits in the coils. The gentleman killed the snake and two of the rabbits scampered off, the other one having been crushed to death.

LIFE.

Contemplate the rutted road.
Life is both a lure and goad.
Each to hold in measure just,
Trample appetite to dust.
Mark the fool and wanton spin;
Keep to harness as a skid.
Ere you follow Nature's lead,
Of her powers in you have head,
Else, a shiverer, you will find
You have challenged humankind.
Mates are chosen marketwise—
Coolest bargainer best buys.
Leap not, nor let leap the heart.
Trot your track and drag your cart,
So your end may be in wool,
Honored and with manger full.
—George Meredith.

UNDER TWO LIGHTS.

The king of day was preparing to bow himself out of the approaching presence of the evening's queen one afternoon early in the winter. Like an ancient maiden who compensates for youth and beauty by donning brilliant colors, so the retiring ruler of the day determines if his presence cannot be felt it shall be seen, and the last thing before his bow is to send up fireworks that surpass and defy the manufacturer's art.

"Without money and without price" Dean Stanton enjoyed these fireworks from the French windows of his father's spacious library. He was lazily contemplating the marvelous beauty and wondering in a weary way if any one could calculate the number of tints in the glorious display as his sister Dora's voice, just outside the library door, broke the reverie by saying:

"Come, girls, Flora, all of you, won't you? Dean's been sick so long and now only gets out a little each day. He finds the house so stupid. Please come."

A minute later Dean found himself surrounded by half a dozen fresh buds, all near his sister's age, 15.

He was inwardly bemoaning his fate and scratching the dusty hay of his brain loft to find something to please dainty appetites. After discarding nine thoughts he served up a delicate morsel that seemed to him might keep them busy for awhile at least, until he could do some more scratching.

"Well, girls," said he, "I suppose you have spent the afternoon talking about the boys."

"No, indeed," was the quick answer of Flora Glenday, a leader among them.

"And does that settle the matter?" asked he, and his air of ennui was blown away by the fresh breeziness of the fair Flora.

"Of course it does. We are not going to give the boys any more time than they do us, which is none at all."

Flora's curls shook like polished coils of copper wire as they glowed and reflected in the dazzling sunbeams that lighted the room.

Flora's little imperious way made Dean, old crusty bachelor though he was, want to make his superiority felt.

"You are right, Miss Glenday," he said, "and, girls, let me give you an old fellow's advice. Men are a queer sot. You may never meet the kind I will tell you about, and again some of you may. There are many true, good fellows in society, and then there are some that think it great sport to sit beside a girl and let an arm drop around her waist or take a stolen kiss and then go and brag about it to the other fellows. But let me tell you, girls, the boys never really respect that girl. They think more of the one who either slaps them or treats them to a sound lecture. Just give it to a fellow who is mean enough to do it to any of you girls. Take an old man's advice."

* * * * * * * *

One evening a month later the queen of night sent some of her little pages to the windows of the Stanton home to brighten it by their presence. Little rays were their names.

But they met such a brilliant reception, the house all aglow with electric light, that they shyly crept back into the big open court of their queen. Here they were joined later by some of the guests of the home.

Dora Stanton was having a birthday party of all her young friends.

She wondered that her brother Dean took such an interest in her guests. He and Flora Glenday were the first on the floor to open the waltz.

He had been very attentive to Flora for some time. It was only natural that Flora felt highly complimented, for there were older girls among Dora's friends. A girl with good sense always appreciates a man somewhat her senior, who approaches her as an intelligent being, listens to her attentively and does not wear the air of a spoiled child playing with a toy.

"Miss Glenday," said Dean after the waltz, "let us try dancing on the porch."

The ice and snow had been swept off, but the boards were still very slippery. At one end of the porch the bushes were very thick, so the queen of night could not send her pages to guide their feet.

Flora slipped and fell. It was only the work of a moment, and she was standing uninjured surrounded by the numerous pages. One danced on a curl as it strayed from under the fleecy nubia, one kissed her lily brow, and another softly brushed her cherry red cheek and downcast eyes.

Those eyes were at that moment glowing with a light kindled by the thought of the kind consideration of men in general and this man in particular, who she believed had lifted her up with as much unconcern as if she had been made of wood. But she was mistaken.

He was trying to compromise with himself, wholly forgetting his advice to the girls a month before. He thought: "She's only a child. Why not?"

Just as she said to herself, "Here's a man that doesn't belong to the queer set," she felt herself drawn toward him, his arms were around her, and her face was very near. She looked up.

The shy, modest light in her eyes retreated before the playful, insincere gleam in his, as the moon's rays did before the glare of artificial light.

If an engine can feel when the lever is quickly reversed, it must be much the same sensation as Flora felt in that moment. She had mentally been burning the incense of kind thoughts before the shrine of man, and he, with a touch, with a look, tore down the shrine and turned the incense to ashes. There was no question in her mind as to her action. She followed under the dim light of the moonshadevice he had given under the sun's broad, searching glare.

She put up her two hands and shoved him from her with a force that stunned him and then ran, ran into the house, up stairs and did not stop until she had looked the door and buried her head in the pillow.

After a little while she raised up and thought aloud: "They are—men are a queer set, but he said there were good, true ones. I guess there must be. At all events," and she smoothed her tumbled hair, "I am sure I did the right thing." —Cincinnati Post.

A Saint.

"Is it true, George," sighed the beautiful girl as she gazed at the man who had just proposed, "is it true that you can put the buttons into your link cuffs without losing your temper?"

"It is," said George fondly.

"Well, then," said the proud girl adoringly, "take me. I am yours."—Chicago Record.

Marvelous Results.

From a letter written by Rev J Gunderman, of Dimondale, Mich, we are permitted to make this extract: "I have no hesitation in recommending Dr. King's New Discovery, as the results were almost marvelous in the case of my wife. While I was pastor of the Baptist church at Rives Junction she was brought down with Pneumonia succeeding La Grippe. Terrible paroxysms of coughing would last hours with little interruption and it seemed as if she could not survive them. A friend recommended Dr. King's New Discovery, it was quick in its work and highly satisfactory in results." Trial bottles free at R R BELLAMY'S drug store. Regular size 50c and $1.00.

A DOLL'S FUNERAL.

"I'll tell you what—let's play funeral."

"How?"

"Well, we can play that my Josephine Maud Angelina doll died, and that we buried her."

"That will be splendid. Let's have her die at once."

Immediately after the death of Josephine Maud Angelina her grief stricken mother said:

"Now, Katie, we must put crape on the doorknob to let folks know about it. You run over to our house and get the long black veil mamma wore when she was in morning for grandpa."

Katie went away and soon returned with a long black mourning veil. It was quickly tied to Mrs. Stoner's front doorbell. Then the bereft Dorothy's grief broke out afresh, and she wailed and wept so vigorously that Mrs. Stoner put her head out of an upper window and said:

"You little girls are making too much noise down there. Mr. Stoner's ill, and you disturb him. I think you'd better run home and play now. My husband wants to go to sleep."

"How unfeeling!" said Dorothy, snatching up the "dead" doll and her other playthings, while Katie gathered together her possessions. They departed, switching their skirts petulantly. They quite forgot to take the veil off the doorknob.

Half an hour after Maria Simmons came down the street and suddenly stopped in front of the Stoners' house.

"Good heavens!" she said. "If there ain't crape on the Stoners' doorknob! Poor Sam Stoner! I knew he was ill, but I'd no idea he was at all dangerous. I must stop on my way home and find out about it."

She would have stopped then if it had not been for her eagerness to carry the news to those who might not have heard it. A little farther on she met an acquaintance.

"Ain't heard 'bout the trouble up at the Stoners, have you?" she asked.

"What trouble?"

"Sam Stoner is dead. There's crape on the doorknob. I was in there yesterday, and Sam was up and round the house, but I could see that he was a good deal worse than he or his wife had any idea of, and I ain't much s'prised."

"My goodness me! I must find time to call there before night."

Mrs. Simmons stopped at the village postoffice, ostensibly to ask for a letter, but really to impart her information to Dan Wales, the talkative old postmaster.

"Heard 'bout Sam Stoner?" she asked.

"No. I did hear he was granting round a little, but"—

"He won't grunt no more," said Mrs. Simmons solemnly. "He's dead."

"How you talk!"

"It's right. There's crape on the door."

"Must have been dreadful sudden! Mrs. Stoner was here last evening, an she reckoned he'd be out in a day or two well as ever."

"I know. But he ain't been well for a long time. I could see it if others couldn't."

"Well, well! I'll go round to the house soon as my Mattie comes home from school to mind the office."

* * * * * * * *

The news was spreading now from another source, and in a way that caused those who heard it to declare that it was "perfectly scand'lous" for Mrs. Stoner to "carry on so."

Job Higley, the grocer's assistant, returned from leaving some things at the house full of indignation.

"That Mrs. Stoner ain't no more feelin than a lamppost," said Job indignantly to his employer. "There's crape on the doorknob for poor Sam Stoner, an when I left the groceries Mrs. Stoner was cooking a joint cool as a cowcumber an singin 'Ridin on a Load of Hay' loud as she could screech, an when I said I was sorry 'bout Sam she just laughed an said she thought Sam was all right, an then if she didn't go to jokin me 'bout Tildy Hopkins!"

Old Mrs. Peevy come home with an equally scandalous tale.

"I went over to the Stoners soon as I heerd 'bout poor Sam," she said, "an if you'll b'lieve me there was Mrs. Stoner hangin out clothes in the back yard. I went round to where she was, an she says, jest as flippant as ever: 'Mercy! Mrs. Peevy, where'd you drop down from?'

"I felt so s'prised an disgusted that I says, 'Mrs. Stoner, this is a mighty solemn thing,' an if she didn't just look at me an laugh, with the crape for poor Sam danglin from the front door bell knob, an she says: 'I don't see nothin very solemn 'bout washin an hangin out some o' Sam's old shirts an underwear that he'll never wear agin. I'm goin to fork 'em up into carpet rags if they ain't too far gone for even that.'

"'Mrs. Stoner,' says I, 'the neighbors will talk dreadfully if you ain't more careful,' an she got real angry an said if the neighbors would attend to their business she'd attend to hers. I turned an left without even goin into the house."

The Cherbury Weekly Star, the only paper in the village, came out two hours later with this announcement:

"We stop our press to announce the unexpected demise of our highly respected fellow citizen, Mr. Samuel Stoner, this afternoon. A more extended notice will appear next week."

* * * * * * * *

"Unexpected! I should say so," said Mr. Samuel Stoner in growing wrath and amazement as he read this announcement in the paper. "A more extended notice next week! I'll write that notice myself. I'll extend it far enough to let that editor know what I think of him. I'll"—

"But how did this crape get on the front door?" interrupted Mrs. Stoner. "I found it there when I went out to get the paper. It is the strangest thing, and I—there's the minister coming in at the gate. Do calm down, Sam. He's coming to make arrangements for the funeral, I suppose. How ridiculous!"

Mr. Havens, the minister, was surprised when Mr. Stoner himself opened the door and said:

"Come right in, pastor, come right in," said Sam. "My wife's busy, but I'll give you the main points myself if you want to go ahead with the funeral."

While they talked over the mystery of the crape on the door the bell rang again, and a moment later they heard Dorothy Dean's childish voice saying to Mrs. Stoner:

"Please, Mis' Stoner, Kate and I left mamma's old black veil tied to your door knob when we were playing over here, and I'd like to have it again."—Spare Moments.

Preparing For a Caning.

Kit Alexander had been warned several times for breaches of school discipline and was at length reported to the head master, who gave him a final warning. One night not long after Kit was again caught in mischief, and he felt that this time he was "in for it." A flogging by the doctor was no joke, and Kit determined to make what preparation he could that the wind might be tempered to the shorn lamb.

On rising the next morning he put on first his undershirt, then a layer of stiff brown paper, then his jerseys, upon these a sweater and over all a clean white shirt, borrowed from his chum, whose clothing was two sizes larger than his own. Lastly he put on his coat and vest.

It was a very hot day in June, and at morning intermission Kit whispered to a friend: "I'm nearly stifled. I hope he'll give it to me now."

But the doctor said nothing, and Kit went on stewing until dinner time. He felt half inclined to dispense at least with the sweater before afternoon school, but fear of the doctor's cane deterred him.

All through the afternoon he suffered untold misery, mopping his face until his handkerchief would mop no more. But at length, just before dismissal, came a messenger. "The doctor would like to see Alexander in his study."

On entering the study the boy saw the supple, snakelike cane lying on the table.

"Well, Alexander," said the doctor, "I can go on warning you no longer. You have brought this upon yourself. But as it is your first visit here for such a purpose I shall make your punishment somewhat milder. Hold out your hand; four on each!"—Youth's Companion.

accomplishes for everybody exactly what is claimed for it. One of the reasons for the great popularity of the Mustang Liniment is found in its universal applicability. Everybody needs such a medicine.

The Lumberman needs it in case of accident.
The Housewife needs it for general family use.
The Canaler needs it for his teams and his men.
The Mechanic needs it always on his work bench.
The Miner needs it in case of emergency.
The Pioneer needs it—can't get along without it.
The Farmer needs it in his house, his stable, and his stock yard.
The Steamboat man or the Boatman needs it in liberal supply afloat and ashore.
The Horse-fancier needs it—it is his best friend and safest reliance.
The Stock-grower needs it—it will save him thousands of dollars and a world of trouble.
The Railroad man needs it and will need it so long as his life is a round of accidents and dangers.
The Backwoodsman needs it. There is nothing like it as an antidote for the dangers to life, limb and comfort which surround the pioneer.
The Merchant needs it about his store among his employees. Accidents will happen, and when these come the Mustang Liniment is wanted at once.
Keep a Bottle in the House. 'Tis the best of economy.
Keep a Bottle in the Factory. 'Tis immediate use in case of accident saves pain and loss of wages.

LOVE'S DEVICES.

With arts and strange devices
Love lures us to his star.
He dons sweetest disguises,
With arts and strange devices
Attracts us and entices
Till we his captives are.
With arts and strange devices
Love lures us to his star.

Without a sign of sorrow
Love crucifies our hearts.
He wrecks our sweet tomorrow
Without a sign of sorrow,
Forbids us strive to borrow
Protection from his arts.
Without a sign of sorrow
Love crucifies our hearts.

A TRUTH SEEKER.

He was a seeker after truth, and as he shivered up the snowy stairway in which the wind was blowing blindly there was a look of worried anxiety in his face. He knocked at the door of the slate writing medium, and after waiting for a moment in an anteroom was ushered into the "presence."

"I desire," said the seeker after truth, "to speak with Philip Augustus of France, or Frederick Barbarossa of Germany, or Richard of the Lion Heart. They are now in the spirit world and have been for 700 years, more or less. I can't just recall their numbers."

The medium went through the usual form required by the spirits in such cases and said:

"I find that the gentlemen you want are all talking now, but there is a young man at Richard's instrument who says he would like to communicate with you."

"All right," said the seeker after truth, "maybe he will do. There is a little matter I want explained, and he can do it as well as anybody. What I want to know is how on earth the people got along in the days of sheet iron armor when the snow and the cold winds came."

Then there was a scratching on the slate, and the medium handed it over to the truth seeker. It read:

"Good! That's just what I want to tell you. My name is Ichabod Potts. I lived on earth in the twelfth century and was with Richard the Lion Hearted and Frederick Barbarossa and Philip Augustus in the crusade that lasted from 1189 to 1192, and I'm the man you want to see. There's a lot about that crusade that history has botched up. In the first place, we called Richard Our Dick, and Frederick, Reddy, and Philip—oh, we called him several uncomplimentary things. Do you want the story? Let me know at once how many words."

"Let her go," said the truth seeker as he looked over the slate and arranged with the medium for the use of the line all day.

"Well," began the slate, "as I said, I am Ichabod Potts, yeoman. I left London in 1188, or such a matter, to go to Jerusalem with Our Dick. The boys always called him that just before a war. Several thousand of us pulled out and marched across country in the fall and got down into southern France for the winter, and by good luck got through that winter without misfortune. Then we fiddled around France and Italy and Germany, drumming up a crowd, when the fall of 1189 found us over in Austria, with a lot of Dagos. Dick got gay one day and ordered a lot of the Eyetalian armor—a job lot, with automatic clasps and a lot of duplex levers and swivels that he was mighty proud of. He kept us drilling in those old base burners all fall, and Reddy—him they call Frederick Barbarossa in the book—looked on mighty jealous, for his men only had one dog chain armor that didn't clank nor glitter, nor nothing. Its only advantage was it was comfortable. Well, to make a long story of magazine length, the winter of 1189 came on—you remember of course the cold winter—but of course you don't. Well, it was fearfully cold—rained all December and took the stove polish off them armors and rusted 'em up some. And then on the 8th of January there was the worst blizzard on the 25 years' record of the University of Vienna. The hinges of them automatics were wet and rusty, and, by Johnnie, when we got up the morning of the 9th, we had to thaw 'em out to get 'em on. It kept getting colder and colder, and at 10 o'clock Thursday morning it began to show. Say, but it did blow and snow! Dick, he had some tin ear muffs and didn't care a cent for the cold, so he ordered the boys out for dress parade.

"It was awful. The snow drifted into the crevices of their breastplates and leg guards and iron shoes till every man was a walking snow blockade. But Dick wanted to make the Dutch dog chain armor look sick, wanted to show Reddy that his job lot of armor was good for all kinds of weather, sort of general purpose armor, and he put us through the Knights Templars' drill, and the fire drill, and the K. of P., and the Sicilian circle, and the 'cheat or swing,' and the 'ring around the rosy,' and all the rest of it. But I saw old Reddy, who was looking on, wink the other eye, and one of his head men rode off to our camp. I say I noticed this at the time, but I didn't think of it until after.

"Well, the rime frost was a-gathering on their breastplates and arm covers and sheet iron helmets and hauberks of our'n an inch deep, and the thermometer was getting down deeper and deeper in the tube. When we broke ranks and went back, you could see the steam come up from under them iron breastplates and through the bars in our visors like the steam comes out of the manhole of a sewer on a cold morning. It was awful. The snow had drifted through the slashes in our boots, and we had to empty 'em out before the track was open."

The slate was read and erased, and the pencil began again:

"I was pulling through an extra deep out going back to camp when I spies a lady who had on one of the new high hats they were wearing that winter. Old Dick, he was going on ahead of me, and I saw him bracing up to make a killing. He felt hurriedly all over his armor to see that it wasn't wrinkled no. unbuckled any place—he was such a sheezicks among the women that way—and as she went by he flipped his hand up to his iron helmet that was covered with an inch of frost, and as he started to salute her the hand didn't come. Froze fast! And the lady, she hums as she passes, 'Where Did You Get That Hat?' I thought the Lion Heart would just burst his breastplate, he was that mad. But he pretended that was the way he always done, says 'the best people was all doing that way' —holding their fingers to their helmets after saluting a lady. I didn't say nothing. It wasn't my cue to come in. So I just helped the old man up the palace steps and pulled out to tell the boys."

A new slate was brought, and the narrative went on.

"Well, sir, when I got there, what do you s'pose I found? Weather cold, mind you, way down to 20 degrees below and still a-dropping. I found that whole blamed army of English crusaders in their job lot base burner armor leaning up against one another, not able to budge. There they was, a-whooping and hollering for some one to come and take the base burners off'n 'em, but not moving an inch. They couldn't. They had perspired on the road and melted some of the snow, and that, with the rust of the night before, had froze tight as a rock. They couldn't move, or they'd fall over.

"There they stood stacked up like a fire sale of old iron, and the snow drifting in and packing down harder in the cracks of the armor plate every minute. I was still in working order, so I sets out to find the blacksmith. When I found him, he was silly drunk, a-dropping the last monkey wrench on the whole European continent into a hole in the ice on the river, which he'd out to see if the fish wouldn't bite. The goose grease, which we used to limber up the hinges of the army when they creaked, had gone ahead of the monkey wrench. And there we was. Ten thousand men or so froze in the armor, and nothing to turn a nut or bolt nor to loosen a hinge, and the blacksmith so drunk he couldn't tell straight from horizontal."

At this the corner of the slate creaked to simulate a chuckle that Mr. Potts desired to make vocal. Then the story went on:

"Well, I done all I could. I pulls out and tells old Dick, and also tells him that I thought old Reddy, the Dutch king, had did it by getting his head man to git the blacksmith full. We couldn't do nothing. Dick and I went out, and the minute we'd get a man away from the stack to thaw his hinges out he'd fall over. He couldn't walk, and when we got three or four off of the south side the wind blew the whole pile over. And there they was. A whole ship load of iron gone to waste, as you may say, on account of armor plate frauds. It was a shame. I told Dick so, but he didn't say nothing. He knowed where he could get plenty more men, and he found a ready sale for the iron in the spring.

"But what worried him worst was to think how that redheaded Dutch king would give him the laugh at the wassail bout that night. From that on he had it in for Frederick, and so the crusade that had started out so fine and gay busted wide open in the summer of 1192 on account of the lack of confidence of the leaders. But it was all that trick of Reddy's in getting Dick's blacksmith full in the cold winter of 1189 that started the row. Dick always after that seemed to side with Philip, who was just no account on earth. Me? Why, the grate of my base burner burned out in the summer of 1191 under the scorching sun of Palestine, and I died. That job lot of iron was no good for winter or summer."

And here the pencil fell on the slate with a short, sharp click and would write no further.—Kansas City Star.

The Dead of the Sea.

An inquisitive Frenchman has thought it worth while to ask what becomes of the bodies, after death, of the numberless fish and other living creatures that fill the sea. Of course they all die, sooner or later, and yet it is an occurrence so rare as to be practically unknown for anybody who lives beside or on the ocean to come across the "remains" of even a single victim of the fate that awaits all things mortal. In the profounder depths putrefaction cannot take place, so if a dead fish once reached those calm, chill abysses he would be preserved until the end of time. Probably, however, no such peaceful repose awaits more than an infinitesimally small proportion of the finny folk, and no great accumulation of lifeless bodies exists at the bottom of the sea. The living eat the dead before they can make the long, slow journey downward. As a matter of fact, extremely few fish, and perhaps none, ever meet what is known as a "natural death." Almost always they are slain and devoured, and so put definitely out of the way.

Railway Natural History In India.

A correspondent of The Times, India, who vouches for thhe truth of the story, tells how a lady traveling beween Kurrachee and Multan with two tame squirrels was stopped at a station and told she must take a dog ticket for each squirrel, as squirrels were "dogs," and was further compelled to put them in the dog box. Railway natural history in India would seem from the above to differ from that taught on English railway lines, where, according to the famous classification, "cats is dogs, and rabbits is dogs, and parrots likewise, but this yer tortis is a insec', and there ain't no charge."

An Undeserved Imputation.

FAME WON BY ACCIDENT.

Bastien Lepage's First Successful Picture Was an Advertisement.

The great French painter, Bastien Lepage, was pursued by unmerciful disaster through his youth in his efforts to study art. His mother worked in the fields to keep that sickly boy at school. At 15 he went to Paris alone, starved for seven years, painted without success, but still painted. He had just finished a picture to send to the salon when Paris was besieged, and he rushed with his comrades to the trenches.

On the first day a shell fell into his studio and destroyed his picture, and another shell fell at his feet, wounding him. He was carried home and lay ill and idle for two years. Then he returned to Paris, and, reduced to absolute want, painted cheap fans for a living. One day a manufacturer of some patent medicine ordered a picture from him to illustrate its virtues. Lepage, who was sincere, gave his best work to the advertisement. He painted a landscape in the April sunlight. The leaves of tender green quivered in the breeze; a group of beautiful girls gathered around a fountain from which the elixir of youth sprang in a babbling stream. Lepage believed there was real merit in it.

"Let me offer it at the salon," he asked his patron.

The manufacturer was delighted. "But first paint a rainbow arching over the fountain," he said, "with the name of my medicine upon it." Lepage refused. "Then I will not pay you a sou for the picture!" The price of this picture meant bread for months, and the painter had long needed bread. The chance of admission to the salon was small. He hesitated. Then he silenced his hunger and carried the canvas to the salon. It was admitted. Its great success insured Lepage a place in public recognition and his later work a place among the greatest of living artists.—Current Literature.

Blackie and the Magician.

Many years ago "the Wizard of the North" gave some performances in Edinburgh, and Professor Blackie was one of the crowd who went to see them. As he was making his way in he felt something at his coattail, and putting his hand into his pocket he found an egg. This he took out and most adroitly transferred it to the pocket of a young man just in front of him, a person as unlike himself as can well be imagined. Arrived in the hall, he remarked where this young man placed himself and chose his own seat in a corner as remote as possible. When the time came for "Wizard" Anderson to "trouble" him for the egg, he arose and explained that he had nothing of the sort in his pocket, but that he believed "that gentleman" could produce it, pointing to the astonished young man, whose surprise, however, by no means equaled that of the wizard.—M. A. in London News.

THE GARDEN.

Choked with ill weeds my garden lay a-dying.
Hard was the ground; no bud had heart to blow,
Yet shone your smile there, with your soft breath sighing,
"Have patience, for some day the flowers will grow."

Some weeds you killed; you made a plot and tilled it.
"My plot," you said, "rich harvest yet shall give,"
With sun warmed seeds of hope your dear hands filled it,
With rain soft tears of pity bade them live.

So, weak among the weeds that had withstood you,
One little pure white flower grew by and by.
You could not pluck my flower. Alas, how should you?
You set the seed, but let the blossom die.

—Pall Mall Budget.

A BILLET DOUX.

"It's a clerk from the Mairie, and he wants a certificate M. Juifs brought home today by mistake," said Mme. Juifs' servant.

Madame put down her novel and opened the drawer of her husband's writing table —that drawer devoted exclusively to the reception of public documents which M. Juifs possessed in his capacity of deputy mayor and councilor of —th arrondissement of Paris.

She pulled out the first paper that her fingers touched, unfolded it and gave a little cry. It was not an official document. It was not the certificate required. Oh, no!

"Tell the man I cannot find it," said madame. "He must call tomorrow. Monsieur is out."

The servant disappeared, and madame sat down, paper in hand.

It was the first time she had opened that drawer—occasion had never arisen until that evening—and she and dry, unromantic documents had naught in common. It was her first attempt at angling in her husband's official preserves, and she had caught a very compromising fish.

She unfolded the prettily tinted, delicately perfumed billet doux. It was that, she knew without perusal, but she read it nevertheless. It ran:

"Meet me tonight in the old rendezvous. You have not forgotten, my dear, though it is years since we lounged together under the trees at the back of the Palais de l'Industrie and listened to the music. Meet me there tonight at 8. Do not fail me. It is hard to plead and threaten in the same gasp, but I can do it. Do not fail me, I repeat. Come to me, or I will come to you, and, madame—and how would you like that?"

It was signed "Marie"—no other name. It bore no address, but the postmark proved it to have come from Gentilly that day.

"I, too, will look into this," she said.

It was past 9 when Mme. Juifs discharged her fiacre and walked round to the garden at the back of the Palais de l'Industrie, where a Concert Bessolievre was in full swing. It was a fine night, warm and starry. The little garden, with its breeze from the river, was a pretty and appropriate lounge. The salon, in the height of its season, had emptied its votaries from the galleries to the fresh air. Breeze and music were alike invigorating after the toil of picture gazing.

Madame wandered under the trees for an hour, until her feet grew weary and her temper "short." Then, when she thought of "relinquishing her quest, she spied her miscreant husband—it was her own adjective—with that woman.

His arm was laced with hers so lightly that the outlines of their bodies mingled. They were talking—she with animation, he tranquilly. Madame noticed how restless and uneasy he was. His eyes roamed from right to left—before, behind. It took every available cover and all madame's ingenuity to draw within range of their voices unrecognized, though she was muffled and veiled. "You will not send me away!" the woman was asking excitedly. "No, no!' he replied soothingly. "You will let me stay in Paris—beautiful Paris —and see you sometimes, perhaps daily? Ah, my dear, how delightful!"

"Yes. Certainly," he replied.

"Wretch!" muttered madame.

"I will keep my secret, Pierre—our secret. Oh, I promise you!"

"Of course you will."

"Will you!" hissed madame.

"She—your wife—need never know."

"Of course not."

"Diable!" exclaimed madame.

"You will not send me back?" she reiterated.

"No. Don't be afraid."

"I know you would not if I could only see you, speak to you, tell you how cruel they are. And they said, Pierre, it was your doing, by your desire, I was there. I told them they lied. I knew it."

"Of course they did," replied Pierre calmly.

"And I tricked them so beautifully," she added, with a chuckle. "They were all at breakfast and my preparations were so carefully planned that I was there before they missed me."

She laughed. The sound struck madame's bones and made them ache.

"Where are you going, Pierre?" she asked after a pause.

"Going!"

"Yes. Why do we walk, walk, walk and never stop? Where are you taking me? Pierre, it is getting late. Where will you take me tonight?"

"To those who will look after you, little one."

"Not—not back there?"

"No. Won't you trust me?"

"Yes. Pierre, I do trust you. You will take me somewhere to sleep and?—"

"You will be quite safe and comfortable."

"And you?"

"I must go home to my wife."

"You must—go—home! You are going to leave me tonight?"

"I must."

"You shall not. You must not. Do you hear, Pierre? I will not let you. I have lost you for years and years, and now I have found you I will keep you. I will; I will!"

"Hush. Don't get excited. I'll stay with you."

At that, juncture madame, standing a few yards distant, was about to reveal herself, but the sudden appearance of two men made her hesitate and watch wonderingly.

Pierre saw the men also and, acknowledged their presence with the slightest movement of the head. Then his face assumed a less anxious expression.

"Come," he said to his companion. "Let us go away. It is late, and we must find a home for tonight."

They turned and walked toward the garden gate, the two men a few paces ahead. Madame drew farther into the shadow.

They passed her. The light of the lamps swinging from the trees fell plentifully upon the woman. Her dress was disarranged and torn, her hair dishevelled and ragged. Upon her frail, wan face sat a smile of victory, an unnatural, unholy smile, expressed only in her mouth. Her eyes shone with the unrelenting fluster of insanity.

Madame shuddered.

As they passed her the woman spoke.

"Pierre, my brother, they call me mad."

Then she laughed mirthlessly. The sweat of pain stood on Pierre's brow.

"Poor girl!" groaned madame. "My poor, dear, wronged husband!" She saw that Pierre was gently leading the poor creature back to necessary captivity.

Recalling to mind that he had once told her of a sister confined in the Hospices Alienes at De Bicetre, Gentilly, she hurried home and arrived before her husband.

It is still madame's greatest desire that Pierre should never learn of her participation in the events of that summer night. —Exchange.

Some Railway Mismaking.

"This won't do," said the general passenger agent in annoyed tones to the map maker. "I want Chicago moved down here half an inch, so as to come on our direct route to New York. Then take Buffalo and put it a little farther from the lake.

"You've got Detroit and New York on different latitudes, and the impression that that is correct won't help our road.

"And, man, take those two lines that compete with us and make 'em twice as crooked as that. Why, you've got one of 'em almost straight.

"Yank Boston over a little to the west and put New York a little to the west, so as to show passengers that our Buffalo division is the shortest route to Boston.

"When you've done all these things I've said, you may print 10,000 copies —but, say, how long have you been in the railroad business, anyway?"—New York Herald.

How Flies Walk on Window Panes.

The microscope reveals the neat contrivance which enables a fly to walk up a window pane or defy the laws of gravity by gliding along, back downward, on the ceiling. The magnifier shows the foot to be made up of two pads covered with fine, short hair, each pad having a hook above it. Behind each pad is a bag filled with a sticky liquid which oozes out whenever the fly puts his foot down. The amount which is pressed out of each foot is very small indeed, but taken all together it is amply sufficient to hold the insect in any position he chooses.—St. Louis Republic.

Nero's Appearance.

In his youth Nero was remarkably handsome, but early in manhood his habits of dissipation made him exceedingly corpulent. To judge from his medals and the descriptions left of him he must have weighed over 200 pounds. His features were regular, but his eyes were so protuberant as to be almost a deformity, and he was nearsighted, so much so that he could not recognize his acquaintances across the street.

TWO MEN KILLED

IN A FIGHT WITH SOUTH CAROLINA DISPENSARY CONSTABLES.

Two of the Latter Wounded — One Fatally—The Dead Men Were Citizens of Tryon, Polk County North Carolina

By Telegraph to the Morning Star.

CHARLESTON, June 28.—A special to the News & Courier from Spartanburg, S C, says: Last night a fight took place on the Howard Gap road, about five miles from here. The constables had heard that a load of whiskey was coming from the direction of Polk county, N. C. Constable Eichelberger sent out constables Pettigrew, of Fairfield, Toland and Byars, of this county, and a man named Stevens to intercept the wagon. They met it in the road, about five miles from town, not far from the scene of the recent Pisgah fight. The constables divided their forces and made the attack in front and rear. One of them in front ordered that a halt and surrender, stating they were State officers. Some one in the wagon said: "All right!" but before they had time to dismount and deliver the wagon and contents, a pistol was fired and Pettigrew fell. The fighting then became general. When the smoke cleared away, it was ascertained that Jack Fisher and Bill Durham, of Tryon, N. C., were killed. Pettigrew was very severely wounded with little chance of recovery. Toland was shot in the the breast, but the ball ranged round and the wound is slight. It is said that a youth, by the name of Brown, a driver of the wagon, was wounded. One of the mules drawing the wagon was shot and it is believed he will die. Stevens was left in charge of the wagon and whiskey. Toland came on to town last night. Mark Durham, a brother of Bill Durham, is in town this morning. He was in the neighborhood yesterday. In a private conversation he said Fisher and Durham were shot in the wagon, and fell back with their heads on a whiskey barrel. The Fisher family is prominent, or rather notorious about Tryon. Physically they are fine specimens of mountaineers. Durham was a close friend of the Fishers, and they could always count on him when needed. They had two barrels of whiskey, and perhaps more in the wagon. It is not known what the destination of the whiskey was. No one from the city was mixed up with it in any way. It is said that Pettigrew cannot live. The coroner held an inquest and the verdict was that Fisher and Durham came to their death by gun shot wounds at the hands of parties unknown to the jury. The constables refuse to give testimony and there were no witnesses. It is believed that Fisher and Durham did not fire at all. Their guns were all loaded and the testimony was that they were shot while lying down in the wagon. It was a pitiful sight. Fisher was killed instantly, but Durham lived for several hours and died from loss of blood.

GRAIN AND PROVISIONS.

September Wheat and Corn Closed at a Decline in Prices—Pork Products Lower.

By Telegraph to the Morning Star.

CHICAGO, June 28.—The spread became wider to-day. The session was one of change in the liquidation. Many persons who had been clinging tenaciously to the stuff they bought when everything appeared brilliant to the bulls, parted with it to-day. Some turned their July deals over into September but the majority did not. Out of town operators sent orders to close out their 'long' stuff on the belief that there was no news to help prices and the local crowd was on the bear side. Some sentiment was aroused over the receipt of the first carload of winter wheat of the present crop in this market to-day. It came from Carbondale, Ill., and was sold at 63c, as No. 2 September opened at 73⅜@73⅝c, sold between 73 and 71⅜c, closing at 71⅜c—1½@1⅝c lower than yesterday. Cash wheat was weak and 1@1½c per bushel lower.

The action of corn was in no way different from that of wheat. The loss sustained was not as great, but the inclination to decline was the same. It is a hard matter to find any one who is bold enough to assume the offensive on the bull side of corn at present. There are bulls in theory, but their belief in higher prices is not great enough to tempt them to buy more than moderately. September corn opened at 48¼c, sold between 48⅝@48¾c, closing at 48¼c—⅜c under yesterday. Cash corn was easy at a moderate decline.

Oats—Holders were selling their oats to-day. The bulk of the orders appeared to come from New York, the parties who were selling allowing their property to come out gradually, so that a sharp break was averted. September closed ⅛ to ¼c. under yesterday. Cash oats ⅛ to ⅜c. lower, with the feeling weak.

Provisions—Buyers were in a minority in provisions. The offerings were much larger than the demand was capable of absorbing and sellers were thereby obliged to accept lower prices. The weakness of wheat apparently overcame the strength reported as existing in the hog market. At the close September pork was 27½c. under yesterday; September lard 10c. lower; September ribs 10 to 12½c. lower.

WASHINGTON NEWS.

Denial of Rumors as to the Treasury Situation—A Mail Robber Caught—Naval Officers Appointed to Conduct a Speed Trial of the Steamer St. Louis.

By Telegraph to the Morning Star.

WASHINGTON, June 28.—Officials of the Treasury Department who have been in telegraphic communication with Secretary Carlisle and incidentally with the President, stated to-night that there was no foundation whatever for any disquieting rumor as to the Treasury situation or the continued integrity of the gold reserve, but that everything was resting on a firm and satisfactory basis.

A messenger in the State Department has been detected robbing the mails directed to the Passport Bureau, and although the investigation is still being conducted secretly, enough has leaked out to prove a case precocious rascality, which will affect hundreds of persons in various parts of the country. Just at this time of the year, when so many people are going abroad, the Passport Bureau does a thriving business in furnishing documentary evidence of nationality. Applications for passports must be accompanied by one dollar, and knowledge of the fact has led to systematic robbery of incoming letters by a 16-year-old boy named Kirk McMurtie, employed in the State Department to distribute the mail. This youth, it appears, has not only secured $400 or $500 within the past few weeks, but to cover up his thefts has destroyed all the applications that came into his hands, together with their enclosures, including the naturalization papers, so priceless.

This proceeding might not have been detected had not the Department been fairly inundated with complaints from persons whose steamer passage for foreign countries had already been engaged that they had not received their passports they sent for. Although the full extent of the peculations cannot yet be determined, it is evident the State Department's loss will be trifling compared with the inconvenience suffered by intending tourists, and until persons whose applications to the Department have not been granted complain of the fact, the officials will not be able to estimate the seriousness of the crime.

Secretary Herbert has designated Capt. Royal B. Bradford and Lieut. Richard C. Mulligan, a board to conduct a speed trial of the American steamer St. Louis in accordance with the provisious of the Ocean Mail Subsidy Act. The officers who were selected because of their familiarity with such matters will leave New York on board the St. Louis August 7th. Arriving at Southampton the ships will be docked and cleaned ready for the trial, which will take place in the English channel between August 14 and 24, the St. Louis being scheduled to sail for home on the latter date. The two naval officers will lay off a course measuring about 100 miles in the channel, and the St. Louis will be speeded repeatedly over this course to determine whether she complies with the requirements of the Postal law, calling for a maintained speed of 20 knots per hour for four hours. No doubt is expressed that the St. Louis will show her ability to fill these conditions with relative ease.

LATE FOREIGN NEWS.

The British Cabinet—Fatal Accident—Russia and the Chinese Loan—Parliamentary Election in Ireland.

By Cable to the Morning Star.

LONDON, June 28.—The following ministerial appointments are officially announced: Lord Halsbury, Lord High Chancellor; Viscount Cross, Lord Privy Seal; Sir Henry James, Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster; Sir Matthew W. Ridley, Home Secretary; the Marquis of Lansdowne, Secretary of State for War; Lord George Francis Hamilton, Secretary of State for India; Right Honorable Charles T. Ritchie, President of the Board of Trade; Earl Cadogan' Lord Lieutenant of Ireland; Lord Ashbourne, Lord Chancellor of Ireland; Lord Balfour, of Burleigh, Secretary for Scotland.

All of the foregoing will be members of the Cabinet. In addition to these Mr. Robert William Hanbury, M. P., has been appointed Financial Secretary to the Treasury, and Mr. George Nathaniel Curzon, under-Secretary for Foreign Affairs.

The other Cabinet appointments previously announced officially are: Lord Salisbury, Prime Minister and Secretary of State for Foreign Affairs; Duke of Devonshire, Lord President of the Council; Right Hon. Arthur J. Balfour, First Lord of the Treasury; Right Hon. Jos. Chamberlain, Secretary of State for the Colonies; Right Hon. Sir. Michael Hicks Beach, Chancellor of the Exchequer; Right Hon. Geo. J. Goshen, First Lord of the Admirality.

KIEL, June 28.—While the crew of the Pinnace, belonging to the German bolted cruiser Kurfurst Friederich Wilhelm, were laying a mine to-day off Friederichsort, the mine exploded, killing eight men.

COLOGNE, June 28.—The Gazette's correspondent at St. Petersburg says that if the Chinese loan raised in Paris and guaranteed by Russia is not accepted in the entirety of its terms by China, Russia will send a note to Pekin protesting against the intrigues of Germany and England against Russian interests in China.

CORK, June 28.—The Parliamentary election to fill the seat for Cork City, made vacant by the retirement of Mr. Wm. O'Brien, was held yesterday, and resulted in the return of James F. O'Brien by a vote of 4,809 to 4,183 for Mr. Roche, the Parnellite candidate. The McCarthyites thus save the seat.

BAD TOM SMITH.

Hanged at Jackson, Ky., for Murder, After Baptism in the River.

By Telegraph to the Morning Star.

JACKSON, Ky., June 28.—"Bad" Tom Smith was hanged in the jail yard here at 1 o'clock this afternoon in the presence of 5,000 people. This morning Smith sent for Jailor Clinters and made a full and complete confession of the murder of Dr. Rader. Smith walked to the gallows with a firm step. Smith was executed for the assassination of Dr. Rader some time ago. Smith had been living with a woman named Mrs. Catharine McQuinn, whose lunatic husband is in the asylum at Jackson. He induced Dr. Rader to visit her on the pretense that she was in need of professional service and murdered him for the money he was supposed to have in his possession. At daylight this morning the crowd began to assemble to witness the hanging. At 7 o'clock 1,500 persons were on the grounds. The doomed man rested well last night and ate a hearty breakfast at 7.30 Sheriff Combs with a strong guard, led the prisoner to the river, three hundred yards distant, where he was baptized by Rev. Carpenter and Kelly. After his baptism Smith was led back to his cell and awaited the hour of execution.

Angus D. Gilbert, charged with brutally assaulting and then killing eight-year-old Alice M. Sterling, in Dorcester, Mass., was found guilty of murder in the first degree. He murdered the child and buried her body.

BUSINESS OUTLOOK.

REPORTED AS ENCOURAGING FROM SOUTH ATLANTIC STATES.

Though Demand Continues Moderate and Collections are Slow—Advance in Prices of Iron and Steel and Other Products.

By Telegraph to the Morning Star

NEW YORK, June 28.—Bradstreets to-morrow will say: The dominating business conditions of the week are the continued large demand for, and further increase in prices for iron and steel which have surprised even the trade. The jump in rail prices, and scarcity of, and higher quotations for plates and nails have tended to produce a temporary scarcity

With the further advance in prices of iron and steel should be coupled the gain of 1c. per pound for wool, which apparently began its journey to a higher level about a fortnight ago. Better quotations have also been made for cheaper grade woollen goods, 2½ cents per yard, for prints, Bessemer pig, billets, wheat, pork, lard, hogs, shoes and copper, while declines in prices are recorded for flour, corn, oats, coffee, cotton, naval stores and cattle. Lumber is practically unchanged.

Total bank clearings, $1,011,000,000, while smaller for all cities than a week ago by 6.5 per cent., are 32 per cent. larger than in the last week of June, 1894, 6 per cent. larger than in that week in 1893, a month after the panic had gotten fully under way, but 2 per cent. smaller than in the corresponding week in 1892.

Business failures in the United States for six months as reported to Bradstreet's show a marked falling off in the second quarter of the past six months, as was to be expected, but not so great a decline relatively as in the second quarter of 1894, which results in a total for six months of 7,597 males, or 1 per cent. more than last year, 6 per cent. more than in 1893 and 9 per cent. more than in the first half of 1891 after the Baring crash. But the total liabilities have shrunk more than $8,000,000 from last year and more than one-half within two years, pointing to the excess in the number of failures being due rather to continued effects of the recent business disturbance on smaller enterprises than to new and unfavorable conditions.

At New York there is nearly the usual volume of midsummer trade in staple goods. At Philadelphia the improvement in demand for staples and for iron and steel, as well as at Pittsburg, is again conspicuous. There is relatively less gain at Buffalo, but at Baltimore the outlook for Fall business is regarded as excellent.

There are a few evidences of a revival of general trade at the South, but merchants at almost all leading cities in that region report that demand continues very moderate and collections are slow. Cotton and fruit crops in the South Atlantic States promises well, and the business outlook is reported encouraging. Incessant rains in Texas have hurt the crops. Increased shipments of Galveston jobbers are reported due rather more to railway freight rate war than to increased demand.

SPOTS AND FUTURES.

Net Receipts at the Ports—New York Sun's Review of the Situation in Cotton.

By Telegraph to the Morning Star.

NEW YORK, June 28.—The following are the total net receipts of cotton at all ports since September 1st, 1894: Galveston 1,651,603; New Orleans 2,568,149; Mobile 250,635; Savannah 940,781; Charleston 427,871; Wilmington 234,416; Norfolk 469,663; Baltimore 117,633; New York 177,636; Boston 332,150; Newport News 33,680; Philadelphia 122,764; West Point 285,927; Brunswick 103,344; Velasco 593; Port Royal 158,379. Total 7,884,660 bales.

The Sun says. Cotton rose six to eight points, then reacted and closed steady, but quiet at a net advance of two to four points, with sales of 96,400 bales. New Orleans at one time was five points higher, but lost two to three points of this later. Liverpool was unchanged on the spot with more business, the sales reaching 10,000 bales; futures there opened one to one and a-half lower, but recovered this and advanced three points, then lost half of this and closed steady at a rise for the day of one and a-half point. In Manchester yarns were reported in the official dispatch as dull and irregular; cloths in moderate demand. Spot cotton here was easy but without quotable changes; 341 bales sold for spinning. Memphis declined ⅛c., but the other Southern markets were unchanged with trade quiet everywhere.

The rise to-day was due to the unexpected advance in Liverpool more than anything else. The private advices from that market were more cheerful, there was a better demand for spot cotton, and there was less talk about English spinners being well supplied with raw cotton. Some rain was reported in Texas and the indications seem to point to further rains in the Southwest and also in the Eastern Gulf States, where they are not wanted; while on the other hand, the Carolina's had fair rains yesterday, the Signal Sevice predicts fair, clear weather for the next twenty-four hours, not only for the Carolinas, but for Georgia; in all three of which States rains would be beneficial. A New Orleans dispatch to Fatman & Schwarz said: Reliable correspondents at Shreveport, La., wire that planters report that the damage cannot be repaired and that the fields are being abandoned.

A LONE HIGHWAYMAN

Robbed a Stage Coach Near Klamath Falls, Oregon.

By Telegraph to the Morning Star.

KLAMATH FALLS, ORE., June 28.—Another hold-up of the Klamath Falls and Ager stage occurred last night, making the fifth within three months. The robbery was committed by a lone highwayman, near Topsy Grade, where the other robberies were executed. The north and south-bound stages pass each other there, and the highwayman held one stage two hours pending the arrival of the other. He rifled the mail pouches of the registered matter, and relieved the only passenger, H. V. Gates, of $2.00.

A GEORGIA CYCLONE.

It Struck Keysville—Demolished a School House and Other Buildings.

By Telegraph to the Morning Star.

WAYNESBORO, June 28.—A cyclone struck Keysville yesterday. The place is small and all the houses were either demolished or badly wrecked. Professor Bradshaw's Institute, where a number of children were attending school, was demolished. The Professor was knocked unconscious and badly hurt, but all of the children escaped. It is reported here that Prof. Bradshaw's injuries will prove fatal.

THE BANNER OF LIGHT

Editor of a Great Paper Cured by Paine's Celery Compound

The Banner of Light is, as every one knows, one of the most successful denominational publications issued in this country.

In its 77th volume it is at once conservative and bright, discussing not only modern Spiritualism, but frequently ending its influence fearlessly in matters of public importanne outside its principal field.

Mr. John W. Day, who is the editor and one of the proprietors, writes in The Banner of Light as follows to the proprietors of Paine's celery compound.

"I owe you a debt of gratitude in placing on the market such a nerve-easing and soothing remedy as Paine's celery compound. It was brought to my notice by a friend who had himself been greatly relieved by its use, as I have also been.

"I have frequently taken occasion to commend Paine's celery compound to others, and I do not know an instance wherein, if faithfully tried, it has not worked a benefit.

"Yours truly, JOHN W. DAY."

Mr. Day is a member of the Masonic, Odd Fellows, Grand Army and other fraternal organizations, and is highly esteemed by his brethren and others in the social walks of life.

His gratitude for the good that this greatest of remedies has done him is no sense remarkable. Thousands who have been made well by Paine's celery compound have sent their unsolicited testimonials to the proprietors of the remedy or direct to medical journals or newspapers telling for the benefit of others the results that have followed the use of the remedy that is food for the nerves and brain, that enriches the blood, that makes the weak strong, and is the one never-failing specific, prescribed by physicians and recommended by all who have ever faithfully used it, for insomnia, nervous debility, neuralgia, rheumatism, indigestion and the many ills that come from deranged, worn-out nerves and impure blood.

LABORATORY OF STATE ASSAYER AND CHEMIST, RICHMOND, VA., MAY 2, 1895.

I have analyzed the Tivoli Hofbrau Beer, manufactured by the Robert Portner Brewing Company, of Alexandria, Va., and find that it is pure and, in all respects, of excellent quality. It is unexceptionable as a beverage, and I recommend it especially for medicinal use.

Observant People

Take care to see everything of interest. Just now the most interesting sight in Wilmington is our superb display of which we are making up in outfits that are the admiration of the city. The point about our SUITS is their ideally perfect fit and faultless style. All the seasonable materials are here, such as

SUMMER SUITINGS,

CLAY WORSTEDS,
CHEVIOTS, SERGE,
BROADCLOTH,
FANCY MIXED GOODS,

Light Flannels. Any style goods a purchaser can wish. The stock an aggregation of first choices in Fabrics which are certain not to be marred by inartistic tailoring.

Correct attire is a combination of first class Tailoring and fine materials, such as we invariably give to all our customers. We have never made a Second Class Suit. This week you can get Plymouth Rock Pants for $3.00, made to order. To sell a pair is to become the owner of a pair. The most exquisite Suit of Clay Worsted made to order for $13.25. Others for $11.50, $12.50 and up. We make a special run in Ladies' and Men's Bath Suits, Bicycle Suits, Shoes and Leggings, all goods made to order. Give me a call.

Things We Understand,

And Things We Do Not Understand.

The Depositor in the

Wilmington Savings and Trust Company

Does not understand how the decline in price of silver since 1873 caused the price of cotton to decline, when the price of cotton declined more rapidly for several years before '73 (when silver did not decline materially) than after '73, and was lower several years before the war than at present, though silver was twice as high at that time as it is at present. The same depositor does understand that his money in the draws interest at the rate of 4 per cent. per annum, compounded quarterly. He is therefore provided with a good Umbrella when the "rainy day" comes.

Wilmington Savings & Trust Co

—THE—

Wilmington Savings and Trust Company,

Has the largest capital of any strictly Savings Bank in North Carolina, and is fortified with a good percentage of surplus for the protection of depositors. This Bank invites investigation, and wishes to see every mechanic, wage-earner, salaried man and all others keep a Savings Bank account and save something each week June 5 tf
